

Travel Summary – All Trips and Day Trips

09 Museums

Museums exhibit collections of curated artifacts, and include human and natural history museums and art museums. Other museums may exhibit collections of things such as Native American artifacts or fossils, or miscellaneous items such as pencil sharpeners.

Not all museums are housed in buildings identified as museums. For example, I also include sculpture parks, open air museums and aquariums as museums. A business or university building may have space set aside for visitors where it exhibits artifacts related to its history or mission. The previous home of a historical figure may now present information about that figure.

I make a distinction between visitor centers (not included here) and visitor center museums (included here). A general visitor center may highlight a lot of relevant information about a place, but displays few if any artifacts. In addition to providing relevant information to visitors, a visitor center museum exhibits a significant number of artifacts directly related to the place, such as dinosaur fossils collected at that location.
