

Travel Summary – All Trips and Day Trips

17 Hikes

The best way to explore a place is on foot. And in nature, this means hiking. Some of my hikes have been quite short, little more than following some trail from a parking lot to a falls or scenic overlook. Many have been in the three-to-ten-mile range. My longest hike to date was a 28-mile day hike in the Smoky Mountains. The hikes listed are better indicators of where I hiked than how many hikes I have taken. Although many of the listed hikes I took only once, I have taken many of them more than once. The Laurel Falls Hike, for example, was a frequent after-dinner activity whenever I was camping at Elkmont in Great Smoky Mountains National Park while waiting for an evening ranger program to begin. The Middle Fork Snoqualmie River Hike is a catchall for dozens of hikes I took starting at arbitrarily selected points along an old forest service road in the woods east of North Bend, Washington, as those hikes all had following the river at some point in common.
